SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

William Henry Hastie, perhaps best known as the first African American federal trial judge, served the government in many capacities throughout his career. From 1940 to 1943, Judge Hastie served as civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, specifically tasked to address any issues arising with African Americans in the military. African Americans in the Military, Part 1: Subject Files of Judge William Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War chronicles Hastie's duties and daily interactions with African Americans attempting to overcome the systematic discrimination present in the government. The majority of Hastie's files contain personal correspondence from young African American men and their families seeking the opportunity to serve the government and assist the war effort. With the assistance of Truman K. Gibson and James C. Evans, Judge Hastie sought to provide young African American men with equal access to the military.

Organized alphabetically, this collection contains a rich record of the personal struggles faced by African Americans. Beginning on the first reel, Hastie is called upon to assist young men anxious to join the Army Air Corps. Most of the letters contain narrative accounts of the application process the candidates endured. In spite of advertised openings for African American pilots, navigators, and mechanics, most applicants were dismissed or informed that no African Americans would be allowed to fill the positions. Other letters contain allegations that physical examinations were biased or falsified to prevent the acceptance of African American candidates. Many of the applicants were informed of mysterious or previously undiagnosed maladies that prevented entrance into the Air Corps. The severity of this situation can be seen in a telegraph contained on Reel 3,

I am away from Home since March first have been trying to enlist in Air Corps or any branch of service other than Infantry. Am Colored Qualifications otherwise OK. Please advise if you can help or shall I give up and return home.

Once a young man entered the service, his struggle was far from over. At this time, the army remained fully segregated. The only exception was that white officers were allowed, and in many cases expected, to command African American troops. As these men transitioned into military life, the discrimination changed with them. Some of this discrimination took the form of administrative and bureaucratic obstacles placed before the African American soldiers. Men were repeatedly transferred across the country; they were assigned to bases where their training could not be utilized, while educated and highly trained men were forced to serve as janitors and servants. While some of the cases of transfers appear to be legitimate, the overwhelming message received by Hastie was that the armed forces were teeming with racism.

Transferring personnel and underutilizing trained men, while clearly racist, are attempts to impede the progress of African American soldiers. Some members of the military, however, cared little about slowing the progress of the new soldiers and sought to end their aspirations completely. While cases and threats of murder are less prevalent than the standard racist reports, they appear from time to time in Hastie's files. A serious example occurs on Reel 9, Frame 0843, where Ethel K. Greene, a civilian from Washington, D.C., becomes concerned regarding the repeated threats from white soldiers. Mrs. Greene reports boisterous conversations between these white soldiers explaining "what the Southern boys were planning to do to Negroes in the army, saying that Negroes could be shot down or killed without detection." Mrs. Greene's letter seems to presage an event described on the next reel. In a report on Camp Blanding, Florida, found on Reel 10, Frame 0843, Judge Hastie received information concerning a troubling court-martial that occurred at Fort Benning, Georgia. The report details a shooting of a black soldier named Felix Hall. Private Hall was shot by a military police officer shortly after the discovery of another African American soldier, bound and hanged from a tree close to the camp. The court-martial contained conflicting evidence, but the final verdict acquitted the white military police officer based on a self-defense argument "despite the fact that all five bullets took effect in Hall's body with most of them having entered from the rear."

Even though Hastie was tasked to represent African Americans in the military, the scope of his job expanded as the war effort grew. A large portion of Hastie's files contain letters and details of problems facing African Americans who wanted to join the civil service. Many of these applicants were African American women who had scored well on the civil service exam but were denied a position after they revealed their race. The systematic discrimination is revealed through personal accounts of the barriers to employment and promotion placed before these African American candidates. This section also contains forwarded documents from the Committee on Fair Employment Practices. The committee was created to ensure that "there shall be no discrimination in the employment of workers in defense industries or government because of race, creed, color, or national origin." In direct contradiction with the Executive Order that created the committee, the letters contained in this section are a testimony to the deeply engrained biases that would take generations to overcome.

The final section of this collection illuminates how military law affected African American soldiers. Many of the letters in these folders are pleas for clemency and leniency from the families and friends of convicted soldiers. In many of the cases, after thorough investigation, Hastie's office found that the trials were conducted properly and that there was no available recourse. In some of the more serious cases, however, Hastie found that basic procedural errors and deliberate neglect of the rights of the accused led to a biased or improper verdict. Hastie was only able to affect the outcome of a few cases, normally slightly reducing the sentence or preventing the application of the death penalty.

Hastie became disillusioned with his employer and his ability to change the racist policies of the federal government. After serving as civilian aide from 1941, Hastie resigned the position on January 15, 1943. Hastie's resignation was a protest against the entrenched racism he discovered in the government and the military.

Other collections of interest from LexisNexis include The William H. Hastie Papers, a collection of Judge Hastie's personal and judicial papers and documents relating to civil rights. Of interest for scholars of African American history,

LexisNexis offers a collection of NAACP records, Papers of the NAACP, which include administrative, educational, and legislative documents produced by the NAACP. The LexisNexis African American collection also includes Civil Rights During the Eisenhower Administration, The Mary McLeod Bethune Papers, and multiple other collections. Other World War II collections include World War II Combat Interviews, Manhattan Project: Official History and Documents, Top Secret Studies on U.S. Communications Intelligence During World War II, and Records of the Tuskegee Airmen.

REEL INDEX

Following is a listing of the folders that compose African Americans in the Military, Part 1: Subject Files of Judge William Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War. The four-digit number on the far left is the frame number at which a particular file folder begins. This is followed by the file title and the date(s) of the file. Substantive issues are highlighted under the heading Major Topics, as are prominent correspondents under the heading Principal Correspondents. Major Topics and Principal Correspondents are listed in the order in which they appear on the film, and each is listed only once per folder. The Principal Correspondents list includes all authors of all correspondence, except the most trivial memoranda and notes.

PRINCIPAL CORRESPONDENTS INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major correspondents in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing correspondence by the person begins. Hence, 5: 0880 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0880 of Reel 5. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microfilm publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file folder containing material on the subject begins. Hence, 1: 0099 refers to the folder that begins at Frame 0099 of Reel 1. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, listed in the order in which they appear on the film.
