SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

William Henry Hastie, perhaps best known as the first African American federal trial judge, served the government in many capacities throughout his career. From 1941 to 1943, Judge Hastie served as civilian aide to Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, specifically tasked to address any issues arising with African Americans in the military. African Americans in the Military, Part 3: Subject Files of Judge William Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, "N" through "Z," chronicle Hastie's duties and daily interactions with African Americans attempting to overcome the systematic discrimination present in the government. The majority of Hastie's files contain personal correspondence from young African American men and their families seeking the opportunity to serve the government and assist the war effort. With the assistance of Truman K. Gibson and James C. Evans, Judge Hastie sought to provide young African American men with equal access to the military.

The Office of the Civilian Aide was not only responsible for investigating the grievances of soldiers, but Hastie, Gibson, and Evans also fought racism and discrimination in civilian organizations. Due to wartime necessity, many civilian plants were converted to produce the war materials needed to ensure victory. Since this production was essential to the war effort, many of these plants became the jurisdiction of the secretary of war. Much of the collection focuses on discrimination and racism present in these industries. These reports vary from the innocuous, unsupported claims of those fired for nonperformance of duty to the more sinister events including the denial of promotions and raises to current employees, to the mysterious disappearance of job opportunities upon the discovery of an applicant's race, and including the ritual termination of African Americans' employment while preserving comparable positions held by whites.

Hastie became disillusioned with his employer and his ability to change the racist policies of the federal government. After serving as civilian aide from 1941, Hastie resigned the position on 15 January 1943, a protest against the entrenched racism he discovered in the government and the military.

Other collections of interest from LexisNexis include The William H. Hastie Papers, a collection of Judge Hastie's personal and judicial papers and documents relating to civil rights. Of interest to scholars of African American history, LexisNexis offers a collection of NAACP records, Papers of the NAACP, which include administrative, educational and legislative documents produced by the NAACP. The LexisNexis African American collection also includes Civil Rights During the Eisenhower Administration, The Mary McLeod Bethune Papers, and many other collections. World War II collections include World War II Combat Interviews, Manhattan Project: Official History and Documents, Top Secret Studies on U.S. Communications Intelligence During World War II, and Records of the Tuskegee Airmen.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after each entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which the file containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 34: 0272 directs researchers to frame 0272 of Reel 34. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial segment of this guide, the researcher will find topics listed in the order in which they appear on the film.

The subject files of William H. Hastie, the civilian aide to the secretary of war, chronicle the daily struggle faced by African Americans attempting to serve in the military during the Second World War. This collection, African Americans in the Military, Part 3: Subject Files of Judge William Hastie, Civilian Aide to the Secretary of War, includes correspondence between the Office of the Civilian Aide and the soldiers, sailors, family members, and other interested parties concerning the ongoing discrimination in the military.

The Office of the Civilian Aide was not only responsible for investigating the grievances of soldiers but Hastie, Truman K. Gibson, and their assistant, James C. Evans, also fought racism and discrimination in civilian organizations. Due to wartime necessity, many civilian plants were converted to produce the war materials needed to ensure victory. Since this production was essential to the war effort, many of these plants became the jurisdiction of the secretary of war. Much of the collection focuses on discrimination and racism present in these industries. These reports vary from the innocuous, unsupported claims of those fired for nonperformance of duty to the more sinister events including the denial of promotions and raises to current employees, to the mysterious disappearance of job opportunities upon the discovery of an applicant's race, and including the ritual termination of African Americans' employment while preserving comparable positions held by whites.

This collection is essential to any researcher interested in the personal impact of institutional segregation. A large percentage of the documents are personal letters from concerned families and service members. There is no better resource to view the human impact of the discriminatory practices of the government and the military.
