SCOPE AND CONTENT NOTE

The National Security Files (1953–1961) from the Dwight D. Eisenhower administration provide an excellent overview of the U.S. government's perspectives during the Cold War. The competition and tension between the United States and the USSR casts a long shadow over the collection and forms a subtext to each letter, report, meeting transcription, and paper.

The National Security Council (NSC) operated under a process they called “policy hill” that included three functions: recommendations, decisions, and implementation of military, international, and internal security policy. The Special Assistant facilitated the decision making of the NSC's regular, interagency reviews of major foreign and national security issues. Eisenhower's Special Assistants included Robert Cutler, Dillon Anderson, William H. Jackson, and Gordon Gray. Under these assistants and the policy hill process, the NSC evolved during the Eisenhower presidency to be a major player in policy making.

Dwight D. Eisenhower National Security Files, 1953–1961, Part 1: Subject Files is divided into four series that are organized alphabetically: NSC Status of Projects, NSC Subjects, Operations Coordinating Board Subjects, and Special Assistant Subjects. The special assistant was a person who supported the president by facilitating communications within the NSC.

The collection begins with NSC program status reports on topics from psychological warfare to the lingering effects of the Korean War (Reels 1–7). The status checking of U.S. resources found in the first two reels continues throughout the collection, as do comparisons of U.S. and Soviet military, economic, political, and nuclear capabilities. These early reels disclose much about the varied government methods used to combat Soviet communism, including several examples of funding foreign anticommunist films (Reel 3, Frame 0955).

Government planners in the 1950s operated on two assumptions: a nuclear attack was imminent and the United States must be superior to the USSR in every arena, from weapons and military strength to foreign opinion. The pressing fear of nuclear attack emerges in a discussion regarding the wartime formation of the Executive Office and the development of warning systems (Reel 4). Hints of the Soviet-U.S. science and technology race appear early with military encouragement of scientific education (Reels 4 and 8). The struggle for U.S. supremacy permeates the discussion of the political importance of the Hungarian Revolution of 1956 and the Suez Canal crisis. To calculate total U.S. resources, the NSC collected volumes of information detailing the military, economic, and political strength of U.S. allies and enemies.

The U.S. and the Soviet governments poured money into the economies of countries that did not fall distinctly into either the American or Soviet sphere of influence. The USSR launched its Sino-Soviet Economic Offensive and, in response, the United States increased its foreign military assistance and economic aid programs. One example of this struggle appeared in Cuba-U.S. relations, where a sense of urgency about Cuba's political direction leads to the detailed documentation of Cuba's history and communist activities. U.S. officials showed increasing concern over the geographic proximity of Fidel Castro's anti-American government. Foreign aid became a propaganda tool to promote U.S. interests, although the results could not always be controlled. An NSC paper entitled "The Decline of U.S. Prestige Abroad" comments on the American shock at not being well-perceived overseas despite billions of dollars in aid (Reel 9, Frame 0846). The author of the paper makes a timeless observation that debtors rarely feel positively toward their creditors as a possible explanation for why dollars did not translate into the expected gratefulness.

Conflict over influence went hand-in-hand with the development of weapons. U.S. formation of an Arms Control Policy included discussions about the usefulness of atomic weapons, weapons custody within the United States, and the morality of building more destructive weapons (Reel 7). The United States continued to develop more nuclear weapons even as the nation and its allies showed less willingness to go to war (Reel 13). The government gauged the possible radioactive fallout in American cities, assessed Soviet capabilities, and outlined possible signs of imminent war with the USSR (Reels 8 and 13). The Killian Report, in particular, contained an analysis of U.S. defense capabilities and vulnerabilities and a comparison with the Soviets (Reel 14). Among the topics compared are missiles, nuclear bombs, fall-out possibilities, air and sea defense, and intelligence activities. A complete chronology of the U.S. Missile Program and papers detailing the U.S. justification of nuclear tests and development can be found in Reels 17 and 18.

With escalating weapons development, the U.S. government placed great value on public opinion, both domestic and foreign. A paper on the Human Effects of Nuclear Weapons Development poses the question "How does knowing you could be annihilated by one country and that your country could annihilate it affect the civilian population?" (Reel 10, Frame 0290) The desire to improve foreign public opinion led to the idea of assigning one person in or near the White House to direct publicity (Reel 15). The government wished to secure information and to control public knowledge and instructed the FBI to investigate newspaper and magazine articles revealing supposedly classified information (Reel 28). The presence of a large number of news clippings in the collection sheds light on how the government evaluated the success of its propaganda. Government officials also begin to recognize that the USSR used the fractured race relations within the United States, such as school desegregation in Little Rock, to cast a negative light on American culture and to promote communism. One result of this realization was a recommendation to hire a "highly qualified negro" to the NSC panel (Reel 24).

The United States had its own psychological weapons. The government incorporated educational exchanges, art performances, and international trade fairs into its foreign policy (Reel 15). The People-to-People Program receives the most attention in this collection. Reels 18 and 19 contain the history of the program and outline various projects such as the Polish Medical Aid Project. President Eisenhower embraced the idea of every citizen being an "envoy" for the United States and printed this message on passports and military papers. In addition, the U.S. government sought to take advantage of the Tibet Revolt and the Polish Poznan riot to effect a negative world view of the Sino-Soviet bloc.

With the creation of the National Aeronautic and Space Administration (NASA) in 1958 came the beginning of the Soviet-U.S. space race (Reels 19–20). Both countries used space satellite research and propaganda to influence world opinion, while the UN negotiated rules of peaceful uses of space. Reel 21 details the Soviet launch of moon vehicles and the U.S. response. The space race, however, was only a part of the scientific competition between the two countries. The collection includes Atomic Energy Commission (AEC) programs, questions over the use of atomic war, and the appearance of the phrase “limited war,” which relies on limited military objectives and political posturing. In Reel 27, the effects of McCarthyism appear in a series of documents concerning AEC scientist Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer’s security clearance. Documents also show an obsession with seismology that arose out of the need for underground nuclear test detection. Documents concerning disarmament and nuclear inspections negotiations, which were colored by fear of a surprise attack, begin in Reel 24 and continue until the end of the collection.

This collection scrutinizes U.S.-USSR relations in every field. The improvement of intelligence communications, the furor over Korean War POWs breaking under interrogation, the consequent military Code of Conduct, and the shooting of the U-2 reconnaissance plane were all interpreted with an eye on the Soviets. A “Code of an American Mother” even called on mothers to teach U.S. history to their children in order to fight enemy indoctrination. When the Soviets blocked access to Berlin, the U.S. considered responding directly in Berlin as well as in a pacific counter blockade of the USSR (Reel 25). When considering its stance toward NATO in Reel 12, the United States outlined three possible approaches—all of which hinged on relations with the Soviet Union. The first approach considered time to “be on our side” and depended on foreign aid, the second established a no-cross line for the Soviet Union, and the third advocated for aggressive anticommunist and pro-American propaganda around the world. The flow of intelligence focused on the Soviets, from Iranian elections to European opinion of the United States and its leaders. Some documents detail a long history of Vladimir Lenin and Joseph Stalin and show that the Russians found Stalin to be rather rude (Reel 30). Reel 24 offers the speech of Frank Rockwell Barnett of the Richardson Foundation Inc. entitled “Carthage, Too, Had Luxury Standards of Living.” In it, he theorizes that countries with low standards of living destroyed countries with high standards of living because its citizens were willing to die for their cause. Barnett draws comparisons between Rome and the U.S. as well as the Visigoths and the USSR. He notes that the “missionaries and conquistadors of the Communist church militant are prepared to die for their strange dogma” while the United States seems no longer to believe in its own values. Even U.S. assessments of its own mentality were evaluated in comparison to the USSR.

The NSC Files thus provide insight into the external development of the United States as a world power as well as the internal development of government agencies such as NASA. This collection also records trips by government officials, interagency opinions on policy, and science and technological advances in fields such as seismology. LexisNexis has published other collections on the Eisenhower presidency and the NSC, a short list of which appears on the back cover.

SOURCE NOTE

The materials microfilmed for this publication are from the Papers of Dwight D. Eisenhower, Papers as President, Office of the Special Assistant for National Security Affairs, at the Dwight D. Eisenhower Library, Abilene, Kansas.

EDITORIAL NOTE

This microform collection comprises the documents accumulated and/or produced by the Office of the Special Assistant for National Security Affairs. The records office of the special assistant consists of 115 boxes of material arranged into three general series: the NSC (National Security Council) Series, OCB (Operations Coordinating Board) Series, and Special Assistant Series. Each series is further subdivided: the NSC Series has Administrative, Briefing Notes, Policy Papers, Status of Projects, and Subject subseries; the OCB Series has Administrative and Subject subseries; and the Special Assistant Series has Chronological, Name, Presidential, and Subject subseries.

UPA's microfilm publication, The Dwight D. Eisenhower National Security Files, 1953–1961, consists of three parts encompassing almost all of the subseries listed above. LexisNexis has not included the Policy Papers subseries in this microfilm publication. In addition, LexisNexis has not included the NSC meeting agenda and minutes portion of the Administrative subseries of the NSC Series. These materials are contained in the UPA imprint microforms entitled Documents of the National Security Council and the Meetings of the National Security Council.

The Dwight D. Eisenhower National Security Files, 1953–1961, Part 1: Subject Files, collection consists of the subseries listed below. A brief description of the contents of each subseries follows. The documents in these series have been filmed in their entirety. A very small number of documents remain classified. LexisNexis has microfilmed the Eisenhower Library's withdrawal notices for these documents.

NSC Status of Projects subseries consists of four primary components: status of projects reports, state of U.S. national security programs, current policies of the U.S. relating to national security, and records of actions by the NSC for 1960.

NSC Subject subseries contains the alphabetical listing of national security topics, including atomic energy, continental defense, nuclear testing, President's Board of Consultants on Foreign Intelligence Activities, and capabilities.

OCB Subject subseries comprises an alphabetical listing of national security topics, including atomic/nuclear energy, cultural/educational exchanges, missiles, space/satellites/rocketry, countries, policies, government agencies and committees, and the National Aeronautics Space Council.

Special Assistant Subject subseries contains an alphabetical listing of national security–related topics, including government agencies, committees, and organizations; policies and programs; and countries.

SUBJECT INDEX

The following index is a guide to the major topics in this microform publication. The first number after an entry refers to the reel, while the four-digit number following the colon refers to the frame number at which a particular file folder containing information on the subject begins. Hence, 18: 0795 directs the researcher to the folder that begins at Frame 0795 of Reel 18. By referring to the Reel Index, which constitutes the initial section of this guide, the researcher will find the folder title, inclusive dates, and a list of Major Topics and Principal Correspondents, arranged in the order in which they appear on the film.
