GAIN PERSPECTIVE THROUGH PRIMARY SOURCES

As the gold standard for historical databases, ProQuest Historical Newspapers makes an ideal starting point for nearly any research endeavor. For centuries, the hallmark of newspapers has been reporting on momentous occasions, taking political stances, as well as covering issues of everyday life. ProQuest Historical Newspapers enables casual explorers and serious researchers alike to digitally travel back through centuries to become eyewitnesses to history.

ProQuest Historical Newspapers offer primary source materials on worldwide and local events from 1764 into the 21st century. Front-page headlines, editorials, display advertising, classified ads, reviews, photographs, comics, birth-marriage-death announcements and other types of articles have been created to enable researchers to dive more deeply and specifically into the digital archive.

With newspapers being created afresh daily, ProQuest Historical Newspapers offers a window into the past with unfiltered access to the daily record of social political, artistic, athletic, and scientific thought and achievement. ProQuest Historical Newspapers gives researchers an opportunity to capture the first development of stories, issues, and develop a comprehensive perspective on key events, issues, and people throughout modern history.

INTERDISCIPLINARY COVERAGE

The inauguration of a world leader. A breakthrough medical discovery. A declaration of war. The social event of the season. The rock concert of a generation. A new recipe. A death in the family. The birth of freedom.

No matter the topic, multiple perspectives enable comparative and longitudinal analysis to make ProQuest Historical Newspapers the ideal resource to discover more about a specific subject. Researchers interested in history, anthropology, the arts and media, sociology, religious studies, international politics, ethnic studies, business, culture, science, family history, and technology will all find ProQuest Historical Newspapers an invaluable resource.

MAXIMIZE RESEARCH TIME

From novice researcher to information professional, users can quickly and easily connect with the information they need about a topic, event, or person through basic and advanced search options:

- Keyword Search: Search for a specific event, place or person.
- Title Search: Search for results within a specific title.
- Publication Search Date: Search for coverage on a specific date or select a range of dates. Or use the Timeline to graphically drill down to the desired timeframe or date.
- Article Search: Search for results based on a specific article type.
- Boolean, Truncation, and Wildcard Search: Search for results with greater flexibility and customization.

UNPARALLELED DEPTH

Researchers have access to the complete back file of content within ProQuest Historical Newspapers including complete issues cover-to-cover. Full runs of key U.S. and International newspapers include in-copyright years and access to content not usually found in online primary sources such as display ads, classifieds, comics and cartoons.

99.995% ACCURACY

Article zoning, human-edited ASCII and creation of a citation and abstract for each article lead to a superior research experience in ProQuest Historical Newspapers. In addition to identifying each complete article including continuations of articles, editors manually clean up the ASCII text for the headline, sub-headline, author, captions of photographs, and beginning lines of each article. This provides an accuracy level of 99.995% of these critical regions of text regardless of how poor the original source material or microfilm image may have been. These fields comprise the metadata and abstract/citation for each article, which end users can easily incorporate into their research workflow.

PREMIER RESEARCH PLATFORM

ProQuest Historical Newspapers is powered by the ProQuest Platform. Researchers can search across the entire spectrum of current and historical newspapers, along with all archival content, providing multiple perspectives of historical events and people for both longitudinal and comparative analysis. Integrated with ProQuest Refworks, a premier bibliographic management tool, ProQuest Historical Newspapers also offers a flexible and collaborative research environment where researchers can save and share search results with others. Researchers can also set-up customizable alerts to notify researchers of new content.
