ProQuest Executive Branch Documents Great Series and Reports, Part 1

ProQuest Executive Branch Documents Great Series and Reports consists of a curated collection of Executive Branch Documents past to present offering timely topics and historic context. It is available on the ProQuest Congressional database. New parts will launch annually, with Part 1 available at the end of 2023.

Why Great Series and Reports?

- Series and monographs with highest research value: Every effort will be made to offer complete series, with newly digitized mid-20th century content as needed.

- Wide range of topics: Agriculture, banking/finance, energy, health communications, education, foreign relations, housing, labor, small business, transportation.

- Range of sources: Content includes EBD reports required by Congress, reports related to public laws, annual reports, bulletins, reports on timely topics, statistical reports of general interest, and reports with research value.

- Searchable with ProQuest Congressional: If user is otherwise entitled, Great Series and Reports will be searchable with other content on ProQuest Congressional, including historic Executive Branch Document modules. Users will be able to easily search for related public laws and associated content, and to link to related legislative histories in Legislative Insight and Regulatory Insight.

- Separate products for each part: Each part is a separate product that will include a mix of agencies and content types, with all series presented as close as possible to complete.

Empowering Research and Facilitating Understanding

Great Series and Reports empowers users to conduct research on timely topics with a historical context. The current and historic content is archived together so all years are always accessible and searchable from the same place. The opportunity to make connections between executive branch documents and related legislative content allows users to understand better the relationship between the two branches of government. Users will be able to retrieve content using harmonized subject terms, agency names, and legislative terms. Links between related predecessor and successor series enable users to track changes in content over time. Links between issuing agencies and predecessor and successor agencies enable users to find related content and better understand changes in Federal agency organization.

This new product facilitates the building of a collection of executive branch documents, historic to present, including complete series, and make available newly digitized documents not available elsewhere. The content and the functionality to work with the content will facilitate teaching and learning about the implementation of laws and governmental policies, and changes in executive branch organization over time.
